

Outstanding Contribution to HR

"The most highly satisfying aspect of my career is the ability to mentor the next generation and to coach others to be as good as you are, and to see them along their HR journey."

Winner Dr. Jaclyn Lee, Senior Director, HR and Organisation Development, Singapore University of Technology and Design

Dr. Jaclyn Lee, Senior Director, HR and Organisation Development, Singapore University of Technology and Design I'm honestly shocked and I did not expect this. I'm overjoyed that all the years of hard work, public speaking, contributing to the public sector, and volunteering have been recognised. The most highly satisfying aspect of my career is the ability to mentor the next generation and to coach others to be as good as you are, and to see them along their HR journey.

Second is to have the ability to impact the HR profession through sharing experiences and all that you know. I aim to continue to do what I'm good at doing, and contribute to the community and profession.

What does the award recognise?

This award commemorates a leading HR figure who has contributed much to the profession throughout their career. Pertinently, that individual will have helped develop, grow and champion the HR profession, and will possess exemplary knowledge and experience in practicing HR within the organisations they have worked for. They will also be a beacon of inspiration to their counterparts in the HR field.
